The following is the substance of Jeff Davis' proclamation, dated Danville, April 15th. The general-in chief found it necessary to nake such movement of his troops as to uncover he capital. It would be unwise to conceal the norel and material injury to our cause, resulting rom the occupation of our capital by the ene my. It is equally unwise of us to allow our own efforts to become relaxed. Under reverses, however calamitous they may e for many months, the largest and finest army of the confederacy under command of a leader whose presence inspires equal confidence in the troops and the people, has been greatly trammeled by the necessity of keeping constant watch over their approach to their capital, and has been forced to forego more than one opportunity for promising enterprise.
